Thomson Reuters CLEAR License Plate Recognition for School Districts

Motorola Solutions' secure shared data network has been trusted for years to help government agencies locate vehicles involved in or driven by those who are involved in criminal activity. When you access license plate data within CLEAR, you're able to search a collection of more than 20 billion commercial license plate records collected over more than a decade to confidently identify new trends and create more complete, connected investigations.

Why is commercial data important?

Commercial data creates a force multiplier effect for agencies by complementing your own internal LPR data with access to a broader network of LPR data. Commercial vehicles, including tow trucks, asset recovery, and repossession, collect multiple records of vehicle license plate locations along main roadways as well as neighborhoods, high volume parking lots, and thoroughfares. This generates stronger trend and location history — making your job easier while searching for a single vehicle.

How CLEAR LPR can help your investigation

Isolate license plate detections or tag reads to determine:

- Recorded plate
- Date and time of scan
- Location

Search license plates using either a full or partial plate:

- Investigations where a witness provides a partial (or full) license plate
- Cold cases
- Amber Alerts

Search by landmark, business, or street to better focus your search:

- When a specific area has been targeted for crime, such as break-ins or theft
- Pinpoint past vehicle locations
- Identify potential associations of vehicles in the same area at the same time

Better visualize vehicle location by combining full or partial plate search with Google Maps™ search.

Filter results to better identify records of interest and quickly narrow hundreds of results.
